Disparities are also increasing, partly as a consequence of the uneven impact of trade openness and globalisation. Policy interventions must ensure a more spatially equitable allocation of infrastructure and public services, along with freer migration. Spatial inequality is defined as inequality in economic and social indicators of wellbeing across geographical units within a country.

In China, Russia, India, Mexico, and South Africa, as well as most other developing and transition economies, spatial and regional inequality - of economic activity, incomes, and social indicators - is on the increase. Spatial inequality is a dimension of overall inequality, but it has added significance when spatial and regional divisions align with political and ethnic tensions to undermine social and political stability.

In recent years, researchers working in countries such as India where substantial regional inequalities have been observed, have begun to grapple with spatial inequality, particularly focusing on uneven availability of community based services (Sunil et al. 2006; Stephenson and Tsui 2003). While this is a welcome change, as we document below, regional socio-political processes shape delivery care utilization in myriad ways --- service availability is just one of these pathways.

Here, we investigate how and why the different people in different part of the country have different life experiences – spatial inequalities – and how these have evolved over time. These inequalities exist across earnings, employment and household incomes. We will also examine the extent to which spatial inequalities are driven by differences in the types of people who choose to live in given areas, rather than differences in the areas themselves.
